YouTube Weekend Pass

Introducing Sachet & Weekend-Only Subscriptions to Monetize Corporate Professionals

The Opportunity & User Research

Understanding the weekday corporate desk block vs the weekend peak binge

Weekday Routine vs. Weekend Binge

Mon - Fri: Low Intent

Corporate professionals spend 8-10 hours locked in work, coding, and meetings. YouTube usage is sparse, utility-focused, and transient. A full-tier monthly ad-free subscription is perceived as bad ROI.

Sat - Sun: High Intent

Screen behavior switches radically to leisure. Binge-watching peaks with long-form podcasts, standby comedy, and tutorials. Standard repeated ads during these deep leisure windows trigger high frustration.

Visualizing the Weekend Screen Spike

The Digital Well-being Pattern

Data highlights an exponential increase in YouTube active consumption time on weekends compared to weekday desk schedules.

This extreme shift validates the introduction of programmatic temporal filters rather than forcing monthly pricing models on price-sensitive audiences.

Introducing The Weekend Pass Combo

Sachet Pass

A single-use 48-hour Weekend Pass priced at ₹15. Perfectly timed for sudden travel, binge nights, or weekend staycations without long commitments.

Monthly Bundle

A recurring subscription at ₹39/month that unlocks ad-free access strictly on Saturdays and Sundays. Mon-Fri returns to standard ad-supported mode.

Smart Trigger

Contextual push notifications land on Friday evenings precisely when the employee transitions to leisure. Quick UPI checks secure instant activation.

User Voice & Feedback

"Why pay for 30 days when I only get to relax for 8?"

This core insight gathered from initial qualitative interviews showcases that the problem isn't willingness to pay—it is the alignment of payment cycles with actual product consumption windows.
